Movement For the Conservation of the Country's Resources Attracts Attention of Country.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 1 .- Governors of practically all of the states and territories, or other representatives specially chosen, assembled in Washington today to listen to reports on the progress of the movement for 8-10-tf the conservation of the country's natural resources. The National Conservation of Resources Commission, which was appointed at the conference held here last May, is also holding a meeting to organize and to give its members an opportunity to confer with the governors on the work already done and the plans for the future of the movement.

The reports to be presented on the work accomplished during the past six months are of a most gratifying nature. In more than half the states commissions have been appointed and in the Pacific Northwest and in New England and in many of the intervening states conferences have been held recently to consider the great public question of conserving the natural resources of the various common-

While in many states the movement is under good headway, the national commission, which is to look after the natural resources of the country at large, has likewise accomplished substantial results since the May conference. These results are to be reported and discussed at the present conference. The commission has practically completed an inventory of the nation's natural resources, the first thorough inventory of its kind ever made by the federal government. Interesting summaries on the waters, forests, lands and minerals of the United States have been completed by experts who have been steadily at work on them for nearly six months. Upon these reports the future work of the commission is to be based.

Attorney General Issues a State ment Bearing on Question.

Austin, Texas, Nov. 20 .- A state ment or opinion has been furnished by Attorney General Davidson to the comptroller's department regarding the recent action of the supreme court in overruling the motion for a rehearing in the Baird independent school district case, wherein the attorney general requests the comptroller's department to advise every independent school district in the state which may have been affected or involved in this question, that the supreme court pleasures for years to come. If you did not pass and has not passed on the validity of any bonds issued by the Baird school district or any other district in the state. Associate Justice Brown, in overruling the motion for a rehearing in the case, declared driving, make them the most desirthat the court had never passed on the constitutionality of any bond issue, but merely held that the Baird district had not authority to levy a tax exceeding 20 cents on the $100 valuation of property within that dis-

G. N. Holton, the bond clerk in the comptroller's department, was directed to send a copy of the statement of the attorney general, including a copy of the opinion of the supreme court in overruling the motion for a rehearing, to each independent district, stating that the bonds issued by such district are valid and a legal obligation against
